Dear Families

Online Safety Information

NET AWARE NSPCC

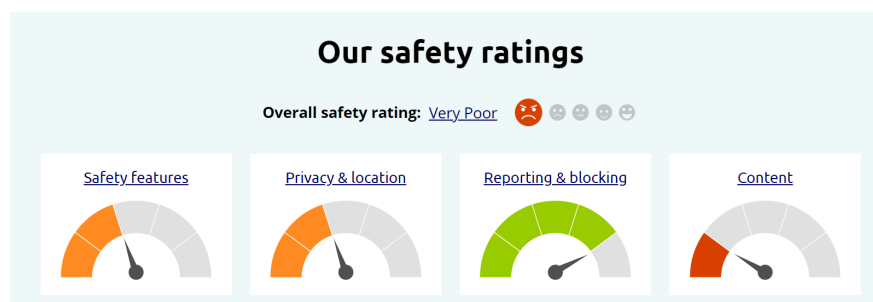

<https://www.net-aware.org.uk/>

Everyday our social world is becoming increasingly online via social media, apps and online connectivity. Our children are becoming more tech savvy and experience pressure to have the latest app; being surrounded by the rise of 'social influencers' and 'gaming' as a career aspiration means that online safety is essential.

Below is a variety of apps/online social platforms that your child/ren may be using. Does the official age rating surprise you?

NET AWARE NSPCC website is a fantastic website filled with the most up to date information regarding the variety of apps and platforms your child may already be using or wish to use. <https://www.net-aware.org.uk/> Please use this link to find out more.

It also includes a very useful safety rating guide for all of the apps, games and media platforms that are available to our children and it has a search facility.

The website also has lots of advice about how to talk to your children about online safety and the risks. You can find guidance on how to set up parental controls on devices.

I hope this guide is useful.

Best wishes,
Mrs Scott

Instagram

Instagram is a picture and video sharing app. Users can post content on their profile grid or to their stories, which last 24 hours. You can follow your friends, family, celebrities and companies on Instagram. Instagram also has a live streaming feature.

YouTube Kids

YouTube Kids has been designed as a child-friendly version of YouTube for 0-12 year olds. It gives parents tools to help tailor what videos their children can watch. YouTube Kids uses a mix of filters, human reviewers and parent feedback to minimise the risk of children seeing something inappropriate or harmful.

byte

byte is a video sharing app that lets you shoot, upload and share 15 second videos. There's a feed which shows you popular videos, an explore page and individual profile pages. Anybody can comment on your videos (and you on theirs) and all videos you share can be downloaded by other users – so it's best to think before you share.

Kik

Kik is a free instant messaging app that lets you send text, photo and video messages to individuals or groups. You can also play games and talk to chatbots. The 'Meet New People' feature lets you start a conversation with random users – for this reason we wouldn't recommend Kik for under 18s.
